The Regional Parks Botanic Garden's Fall Plant Sale is a rare opportunity to select from an unmatched diversity of California native plants propagated by volunteers from the Garden's collection, including trees, shrubs, groundcovers, perennials, grasses, bulbs, ferns, and annuals, as well as native plant seeds. Many of the plants offered are not available in commercial nurseries. Look for plenty of native irises (Iris), sages (Salvia) coral bells (Heuchera), buckwheats (Eriogonum), trillium (Trillium), and monkeyflowers (Mimulus) along with a diversity of manzanitas (Arctostaphylos) and ceanothus (Ceanothus). The sale features plants to fit conditions in every Bay Area garden, with experts on hand to provide advice and gardening tips. Visitors may explore the Garden and benefit from horticultural advice. Please bring your own boxes to cart home your purchases. The terrific and tireless Regional Parks Botanic Garden volunteers organize the event, and all proceeds directly benefit the Garden. The Regional Parks Botanic Garden is a naturally beautiful and tranquil living museum of California native plants. Located within Tilden Regional Park in the hills above Berkeley, California, this enchanting 10-acre garden is a sanctuary for many of the state's rare and endangered plants and a place for visitors to wander among trees, shrubs, flowers, and grasses from plant communities throughout the state.
